Data on Gardner Sent to Justice

By Ruth Montgomery
International News Service

The Senate Investigations Committee said Gardner testified that he severed all connections with Hycon before being sworn in March 1, 1955. Previously he had served for two years as special assistant to the Secretary of Air.

Gardner

Gardner returned this week to his former firm, Hycon Manufacturing Co. of Pasadena, Calif., as chairman of the board.

The company, which Gardner served as president until joining the Defense Department in 1953, has large contracts with the Government and is engaged in the production of guided missiles, electronic and ordnance equipment.

Senate investigators had been investigating Gardner for some time before his surprise resignation. The probe centered around the possibility that Gardner might have had a conflict of interests. Investigators sought to determine whether he had actually severed all connections with Hycon, which was doing business with the Defense Department.

A Senate member of the Com-

Gardner is expected to be a star witness during the current Senate investigation of our missiles program. He probably will not be called until early next month.

A member of the Senate Investigating Committee said his group has "not lost our interest" in the Gardner case, but would probably not resume its investigation until the Justice Department determined whether any further action is warranted.
